ABOUT THIS PROGRAM
The theology department considers theology to be an integrated practice that unites an encounter with the triune God in faith, hope and love with critical inquiry and active service. In the theological fields, students take courses that focus on the nature and history of Scripture, approaches to interpreting the Bible, central themes of the Bible, topics in systematic theology, the history of Christianity, and the habits of the Christian life connected to these inquiries. The majors in the theological fields are relevant to a wide variety of interests and vocations and are often suitable as a second major for those wanting to develop a theological perspective on other fields of study at the college. In the ministry fields, students take courses which cultivate their insights about the purpose and task of ministry, including topics such as leadership, administration, and spiritual formation. A wide variety of students study ministry, from those seeking to work in full-time ministry positions to those who simply want to offer their gifts in ministry alongside other callings. Given that theology is an integrated practice, all students engage in field work relevant to their calling and interests.
