ABOUT THIS PROGRAM
The communication arts program seeks to graduate ethical and competent communicators who engage personal and professional life with practices and ideas integral to the field of communication as informed by a biblical vision for seeking the good of the other.

Our program honors the basic role of symbolic action in all culture by teaching effective oral, written, and digital communication; critiquing the economics and politics of mass media; exploring the resources of communication theory; and developing a Christian ethic of communication. Honoring the important role that the study of communication has played in liberal arts curricula, our communication arts program approaches human communication holistically, seeking to unite theory and practice and to relate both to the broader Foundations curriculum.
